FIGHTING MEN WILL LAY CHIEF'S BODY TO REST

THREE PERSONS DEAD IN STORM

MINISTER'S FAMILY CAUGHT IN HOME

Third Member Dies in Birmingham Hospital of His Injuries

WIND DEMOLISHES FRAME RESIDENCE

Family Was Grouped in Reverent Attitude as Tornado Hit

(Associated Press)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Feb. 5—With death in a Birmingham hospital of Earl Carpenter, 13, the third member of the family of Rev. Wallace Carpenter, was counted in the toll death as a result of a storm which struck the Carpenter home, 12 miles west of Birmingham, yesterday.

The Rev. Mr. Carpenter and three of his small children lie in precarious condition in the same hospital, suffering from injuries sustained at the time Mrs. Carpenter and their eldest son, Clarence and Earl, were fatally injured.

Sensing the storm's approach the father gathered his family about him in a group where, in a state of reverence, they remained until the blow struck the frail home as if it had been made of bark.

The house was situated on a steep incline, which was said to account for the havoc wrought. The family had finished the evening meal and was enjoying the happy hour. Darkness enveloped the home and the head of the house saw the storm's swift approach. The head of the house gathered his family about him in the living room.

In a twinkling of an eye the house was wrecked and torn and its occupants scattered with its timbers in all directions. It was with utmost difficulty that help was summoned. The victims were rushed to a Birmingham hospital where it was found Rev. Carpenter and his children were seriously hurt. Earl died at noon. Mrs. Carpenter and her eldest son were believed to have been killed almost instantaneously.

Officers and Posse Capture Big Still

Accompanied by about 12 citizens of the Brown settlement, on Flint Creek, 5 miles west of the Twin Cities, Sheriff C. E. Poole, Federal Prohibition Officer Hampton and Deputy Sheriff Ben Poole Tuesday morning before day made a successful raid on a still which was being operated in the dense forest back of the Brown settlement. When the officers and the citizens, all of whom were armed, reached the scene of the still, it had been deserted but a fresh run of liquor was in course of completion and about 65 gallons of beer were found officers stated. Also nine barrels of beer were found. The still was burned by the officers.

COCA COLA KING FIGHTS SUIT.

Asa G. Candler, multi-millionaire Coca-Cola king of Atlanta, Ga., is contesting the $500,000 breach of promise suit brought by Mrs. Onesima De Bouchell, New Orleans society woman, now on trial in the Federal District Court in Atlanta. Mrs. De Bouchell alleges Candler broke off their engagement on the pretense that she had invited men to her room in an Atlanta hotel, and she sued to clear her name. Candler retorted that Mrs. De Bouchell, at the time they were engaged, was still the wife of Adolphe Rouquet, of New Orleans, whom she divorced later in Reno, Nev., and their engagement, therefore, was void.

FARMERS IN BETTER SPIRITS THIS YEAR

The farmers of Morgan County are in better spirits, better off financially and more determined to succeed than at this season a year ago, stated R. L. Sherrill, a prominent business man of Hartselle, while here today.

Mr. Sherrill stated he was born and reared on a Morgan County farm that he worked on the farm until he was grown and that he always had taken a keen interest in farming and had sought to keep in touch with the farming interests of the county.

Mr. Sherrill said farmers believe the freezing weather has blighted the hopes of the boll weevil, and consequently brightened the hopes of the cotton growers.

"Another thing that encourages the farmer," said Mr. Sherrill, "is the reports that fertilizers will be cheaper this year than last."

Mr. Sherrill explained that the Hartselle convention held some time ago was an evidence in itself that the farmers of the county are becoming more and more alive to their privilege and duties.

"Since the success of the rest of us is in a large measure dependent on the success of farming, we are very anxious that the farmers do all within their power to bring success. And every one who can, seems to be anxious and willing to cooperate with the farmers of Morgan County."

"I notice one thing," continued Mr. Sherrill, "that when farmers bring in their produce for sale, they are able to make their purchases and still have money left. The banks show that the farmers have some money. Our banks have much more money on deposit than at this time last year, and about 75 per cent of that money belongs to the farmers."

"Mr. brother, who is in the produce business, says that take the whole year around the chickens and eggs and such farm produce amounts to more in a year than does the cotton crop in dollars and cents."

"I believe the farmers can make nearly everything they need, and when the do this to a larger and larger extent, they will have more money to spend with the business and to educate their children."

POLICE BAFFLED IN SLAYING OF PRIEST

On Way Home From Sick Call, Is Killed by Companion

CROWD FAILS TO GLIMPSE KILLER

Meagre Description of Murderer Given by Two Youths

(Associated Press)

Bridgeport, Conn., Feb. 5—The police were puzzled today in attempting to trace the murderer of the Rev. Hubert F. Dohme, pastor of St. Joseph German Catholic church, and to find a motive for the crime.

Father Dohme was shot through the head early last evening as he was walking along main street. The slayer had been walking with the priest, according to the meagre evidence obtainable. Father Dohme was returning from a sick call. He died at a hospital two hours later without recovering consciousness.

The shooting occurred within a stone's throw of the Lyric theater, in front of which a crowd was gathered, and about four blocks from the church and rectory. None of the theater crowd saw the shooting, with the exception of two small boys.

From the boys, the police obtained the only description they have of the murdered. The boys say the slayer stepped to one side, suddenly fired a shot, and fled. He was described as about five feet, six inches in height, of slim build, and wearing a blue overcoat and cap.

METHODISTS ASK PLEDGES BE MADE

Subscriptions of the Centenary fund as sought by the Methodist Episcopal church South, is now due and payable and many leaders of the Methodist church, South in the Decatur district are making addresses to churches throughout the district.

Dr. Walton P. McGlawn, presiding elder of the Decatur district is leading the movement, the ultimate purpose of which is to clear up all indebtedness to the centenary movement.

One of the main objects sought at this time by the Methodist people is the pledging of "a $100,000 fund, the income from which will be used for the support of the thousand worn out and superannuated teachers of the church."

One of the leaders said: "The first substantial gift announced to this fund is that of $100,000 provided by Paul Brown, a St. Louis broker."

Dr. Luther E. Todd of St. Louis, who with Bishop W. F. McMurray of Louisville, Ky., is leading the movement for the entire Southern connection of the Methodist church said that 400 of the used-up preachers are practically blind and deaf; about 450 others are invalids "and nearly all of them are in constant danger of the wolf that snaps and snarls at their doors."

GERMAN EMBASSY MAKES NO DISPLAY OF MOURNING FOR THE FORMER AMERICAN PRESIDENT

(Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5—By direction of the Berlin government, the German embassy here has refrained from any display of mourning for Woodrow Wilson. No flag has flown over the embassy since Mr. Wilson's death, although other embassies and legations have had their colors at half mast since the official notification reached them, before noon Sunday.

Baron Leopold Plessen, third secretary at the embassy, made this explanation: "The German government considers the late Mr. Woodrow Wilson a private citizen and therefore has instructed the German embassy to refrain from any official display of mourning."

When Mr. Wilson died, the state department, following the diplomatic

SHERIFF RETURNS WITHOUT CROWDER

Arthur Crowder, held in the Morgan County jail on a charge of forgery is still here, while Sheriff Rhyne, of Gaston County, North Carolina, who came here after Crowder had issued a statement in which he admitted a part in the slaying of a man named Ford at Gastonia, is enroute home.

Sheriff Rhyne and local authorities conferred at length yesterday over Crowder's status and the officials here informed Sheriff Rhyne they were willing to have the prisoner returned to Carolina, provided assurances are given that he is guilty, but at the same time they desired as much as possible of the reward money offered for him, in order that local people may be reimbursed for losses they were alleged to have sustained through Crowder's operations.

Sheriff Rhyne told Solicitor D. C. Almon that he would take the matter up with the North Carolina governor and keep local officers informed of the developments in the case. Solicitor Almon immediately wrote the Carolina chief executive, giving the details of Crowder's arrest and later sent a telegram to the executive, asking him to take no action until the letter was received.

THE FORD PRELIMINARY VICTORY

The easy and overwhelming victory of the Ford forces in the Military Affairs Committee of the House is very encouraging to the friends of the Ford offer for the Shoals everywhere and they have reason to be jubilant. It shows how strong the sentiment for the Detroiters really is. There can be no doubt that the people and their representatives have taken into account the sincerity of purpose behind the Ford proposition—the broad purpose of service to the people and the government—and the insincerity and selfishness that lurk behind the plans of the power trust. The siren song of the syndicate does not appeal to them.

But it is just as well to remember that the fight is not yet won. The enemy is not yet ready to surrender but will carry the war onto the floor of the House, and will seek by every device of parliamentary procedure to keep final action from being taken. With the tremendous odds that are evidently against them, the power companies will seek to benefit by every possible delay in the hope of thus defeating the will of the majority. "Anything to gain time" will be the slogan of the trust and its emissaries in Congress will resort to every dilatory tactic that the rules will allow.

And at last when the inevitable comes to pass, and the House endorses the action of the committee, as it undoubtedly will do, there will be the Senate gauntlet to run with further opportunity for harassment. In fact it is in the Senate where the real tug of war will come between the opposing forces of those who are for and those who are against the Ford bid. And there would be reason for grave apprehension were we not assured by Senators Underwood and Heflin that they are prepared to see the measure accepting the Ford offer successfully passed in the upper House.

We are not crepe hangers and have no wish to detract from the joyous atmosphere created by the action of the Military Affairs Committee. We delight in optimistic sentiment. And there is every reason for elation over the victory in the first skirmish. But we feel that it is just as well not to be over-confident. Blessed is he that expecteth little. Getting more than you anticipate never hurts anybody. And so while the realization of our hopes is seemingly drawing near there is still a possibility of failure and it is better to consider its consequences than to wake up and find yourself living in a fool's paradise should the unexpected yet happen. "Pray for sunshine but always be prepared for rain."—Muscle Shoals News.

JAPAN RENEWS HER YOUTH

When the Crown Prince, Michi-No-Miya Hirohito, succeeds his father, the Emperor Yoshihito of Japan, he will be the one hundred and twenty-third ruler of the flowery land so recently indulging itself in joyous celebration of his nuptials.

Since the springtime days of the Sunshine Goddess, two thousand years ago, Japan has been ruled by an unbroken dynasty of august and honored sovereigns. The ephemeral ways of moderns do not easily replace traditions thus hoary with centuries of use.

For the occasion of Yoshihito's coming to the throne, something less than nine years ago, our new Japan threw off its latter-day garment of western cut and fashion and again arrayed itself in the robes of its ancient faith.

to the habits and traditions of their ancient faith. Costume and custom, of a sudden, so the missionaries wrote us, Japan was old Japan again and Shintoism resumed for the time the full picturesqueness of its persistent sway.

The Emperor did not assume his crown in the crude manner of western potentates. He simply communicated to his ancestors the fact that he had ascended the throne. But to do this, he carried his elated little kingdom for a full week through a magic revel of swaying color, ravishing costume and myriad lanterns of every shape and hue. Long centuries of the dead held the pageant ready for his using.

The sacred treasure box of the empire became for this crowning the center of a ceremonial of strange and ghostly meaning, and its treasures the sword, the mirror and the chaplet of pearls, shrouded for a veneration which our western minds find hard to understand.

As the new emperor came to his throne Nippon lived again with the souls of her departed lords.

When the ceremonies were over Japan turned once more to the practices of its newly assumed civilization, but the world had had a glimpse of what seemed the real heart of this childlike but canny little kingdom.

Whether or not the spectacle indicated an unchanging persistence of race instinct in the Japanese, it was not easy to say, but it is significant that much of the same spirit came back not many days ago, with the marriage of Prince Hirohito and his ivory-hued bride, the Princess Nagako.

The wedding was celebrated with Shinto rites whose origin antedates the Christian era, and the most vital office of which was the announcement of the union to the imperial spirits enshrined in the Holy of Holies. Two hours were spent in ceremonial approach by the bridal party to the shrine, with the soundings of loud clappers for every step. From the shine itself the spirits of one hundred and twenty-two royal predecessors gave their blessing.

The Prince was dressed as a Japanese gentleman, we are told, in a silk coat of red and yellow embroidered in Mandarin ducks, wide trousers of white covered with patterns of butterflies and a great purple train.

The costume of the Princess consisted of layer upon layer of gorgeous kimonos in red and purple and white and heavy embroideries of tortoiseshell and pine trees, symbols of long life. She carried a fan of gilded wood richly painted and, like the Prince, wore a train of purple silk.

After the ceremony at the shrine there was a triumphal ride through the streets of Tokyo with joyous "Banzais" on every side, flags on all buildings, even the frail tents of the earthquake refugees, and happiness everywhere. But there were airplanes overhead for this out-of-door part of the festivities, electric lights, modern street cars, telephone calls and all the rest of the many things that make or mar the Nippon of today.

In other words, the heart of the ceremony over and done, Japan reassumed her modernness, but not until those of us who think with regret of the dreaming, shadowless, cherry-petaled land that she once was, had had a mystic glimpse of the second national atavism that has caught her back to her belongings in a single generation.—Nashville Tennessean.

MAKING EDITOR BOKA PEACE PROPAGANDIST

Edward W. Bok, the man who offered a $100,000 for the best peace essay, was hailed as a great benefactor until very recently, when the enemies of a league to prevent war have sought to fault him, and to charge him with seeking to influence the American public by an improper method.

It is charged the judges who awarded the decision as to the best of the 22,165 peace plans offered, were all League of Nations believers, either outright for the league, or for a similar organization.

The New York Herald evidently believes Mr. Bok is a peace propagandist and sought to arouse public sentiment for the League of Nations in the same sense that an ardent believer in protection as against free trade might get up a contest as to who could present the best plan for making the American people rich. The Herald says:

"What if a man offered a prize of $100,000 for the best plan to keep America prosperous, permitted the jury of award to be so completely controlled by rabid protectionists that a high tariff plan was sure to win the prize and let the competition be used as propaganda for inordinate tariff rates?"

The Herald evidently is opposed to the League of Nations and almost all peoples and individuals found opposing Mr. Bok's plan will also be found to world peace as brought about by the League of Nations.

Those who favor some means of abolishing war and really believe that evil can be abolished, are not finding fault with Mr. Bok for offering as much of his own money as he pleased in an open and above board method to bring about peace and harmony in the world.

Those who oppose the ideas on how to end war as expressed in the winning Bok essay, would do better, if they would show the fallacy of the peace plans of the essay rather than to seek to attack the motives of a man who cared naught about world peace to spend $100,000 of his own money for the purpose of seeking council from the best minds as to ways and means for ending war.

GERMANY TO BE BUYER FOR SOUTHERN COTTON

A market for Southern cotton that has been closed since the starting of the World war now is being reopened through the reviving activity of the German textile mills in buying and making use of many thousands of bales of cotton from the Southern states. This, it is claimed in a press dispatch from New York, will result in German spinners taking one hundred million dollars' worth of cotton in the United States during the coming crop year, thus creating a demand for the South's cotton in a field that has been closed for nearly ten years.

Up to January 1, of this year, the dispatch says, Germany had purchased 500,000 bales of cotton in America and representatives of the cotton spinning industry there have, it is claimed, established a $10,000,000 credit with American bankers. It is added that at least 200,000 bales in addition to the 500,000 bales already recorded sold, will be required by Germany during the new crop year.

Germany as a nation is bankrupt and millions of German people are in dire want, but German financiers and captains of industry still are able to finance industry in that country, and really the rehabilitation of German business and industry is about the only thing that can give relief to the masses in that country through affording employment to them at something like living wages.

If Germany is able to buy and pay for 700,000 bales of cotton it will be a fine thing for Germany's textile industry, for the German people and for Southern cotton growers, for it will add to the prosperity of all of them.—Anniston-Star.

THE PEOPLE OF THE COUNTY LOOKING TO THE FARMERS

At no past time in the history of Morgan county was there greater reason for the farmers to "put their best foot forward." As certain as anything human, this valley is destined to great development in the years that are to come.

Reports worthy of belief are current to the effect that regardless of what interests get the Muscle Shoals project, many people from other states are planning to move to the Tennessee valley. In large measure success or failure for the future rests with the farmers. If they will plan to increase their wealth, they will give employment and opportunities for hundreds and thousands more people than now live in the Tennessee valley.

Col. J. W. Worthington, whose name is written large on the pages of history now being written in this valley, in all his addresses of the past few years, has stressed the part the farmers must take if this section of the state is to come into its own. He has been known to have said that despite however great are the developments at the Shoals, unless the farms of the valley are made more productive and greatly improved, the dream of this being a wealthy section of the country can never come true.

The Hartselle convention which came to a close some weeks ago, gave the farmers a splendid program. It remains for the farmers and those who are to co-operate with them to put that program or a better one into full effect.

Because the prosperity of the farmers is the prosperity of all who serve them and furnish them with the things they need, there is not a fairminded person who is not a farmer unwilling to go the limit for the success of the farmer. But just as one of the horses of a team cannot pull the load intended for the other horse, neither can the non-farming class do the work for the farmers or make them prosperous. Right or wrong, some in this section who claim they understand farming, declare that if as much time, effort and talent were put into the tilling of the soil as is put into other occupations the farmers could make the valley prosperous both for themselves and those dependent upon the farmers beyond the dreams of avarice.

With springtime drawing near, and with the hope and belief that the boll weevil and other pests have been destroyed in part, it is the earnest hope of all who are looking to the success of the farmers in large measure for their own success, that they will be encouraged to make a great and successful effort this year and in all the years of the future.

Just as Lloyd George said he looked to Woodrow Wilson to come faster and stronger than the enemies of the allies in the World war, and also declared Mr. Wilson must bring victory to the allies, so the people generally are looking to the farmers lead forward to better things for the county.

Things are not so smooth for the ship of state although there seems to be plenty of oil to pour upon the troubled waters.

The world's nations would have stable governments if they would keep their war horses in the stable.

Self-made men are those who refuse to let circumstances unmake them.

The acid test is generally more pleasant for those who make it than for those for whom it is made.

The Teapot Dome affair bids fair to be more than the proverbial tempest in a tea pot.

The leaders in the veterans' bureau are doubtless heartily glad the oil scandal came about, as they are now getting a brief rest spell.

Revelations of a Wife

Efforts Were Under Way to Protect the Children.

HARRIS'S kindly phrased comment upon my patience with her mother lingered in my memory through the rest of the hectic afternoon, which she and Lillian and I put in with the preparations for leaving the farmhouse with the orphaned Harrison children. Things were coming our way, I told myself whimsically, when both Dicky's mother and sister took especial pains to say nice things to me.

It was not long, however, before I had something more important than compliments to consider. When Lillian had seen to it that every child of the Harrison family was bathed, combed and dressed for the journey, and had established them in the library with books and games and an injunction to keep themselves immaculate, she came to my room, where, having helped Harris all I could, I was making my own preparations for my return to the New York apartment.

"I don't want to alarm you," she said, "but I think you ought to be prepared for possible trouble in this house."

Her words fitted a subconscious premonition of uneasiness which had been running in my mind, and I turned anxiously toward her.

"I've been a bit uneasy myself," I confessed, "but I didn't quite like to say so."

"I passed uncertainly, and Lillian finished the sentence for me with a comprehending smile."

"To be asked if you were qualified as an author of episode films? I know. That's what the Dicky-bird and his relatives probably would hand out—all that is, except your mother-in-law. She has sense enough in that wise old head of hers to know that the apparently impossible is the thing that too often happens."

"Just what do you fear?" I asked.

"Nothing tangible," she returned. "Only—has it struck you that if those Harrisons are entertaining enough to hire an attorney in order to demand the Harrison children, they may also be far-sighted enough to engage a detective to shadow them?"

"I have thought of it," I admitted, "but—you know how penurious they are supposed to be."

"Yes, but their general cunningness is supposed to be stronger," she returned. "I don't say that they have done it, or are going to, but I do think you ought to keep a weather eye out for squalls. Incidentally, how did that attorney know your mother-in-law's post-office address? The Harrisons didn't even know their brother was dead by any word your people sent them. That poor William Harrison must have foreseen just this trouble, he was so anxious to keep everything from his own people."

Warnings About the Address.

"He knew better than anyone else did," I said, then considered her question with a troubled frown.

"They must have secured Mother's address from the business associate of Mr. Harrison whom Edwin and Dicky left in charge of the house."

"I suppose the Dicky-bird blithely left this address when he might just as well have given the studio," Lillian commented witheringly. "Well, I only hope the Harrisons are not as enterprising as we think. Luckily nobody except ourselves knows your New York address unless the Dicky-bird took it into his fool head to spill that, too. I'll find out pronto."

She hurried out of the room, and I had finished my packing, and was dressing when she returned.

"I've made the rounds," she said, "and find that for a wonder the Dicky-bird, or anybody else, didn't mention the New York address. And I've cautioned everybody in the house, including Jim and Katie—especially Katie—not to mention it to anyone. Whenever you can run me down to the post-office I'll make it a cinch that no garrulous underling spills the beans in that direction."

She touched the little Secret Service badge hidden in her dress, and then, aroused for the Harrison children, would leave nothing undone to safeguard them from a coldly calculating and unfeeling relatives who were trying to obtain possession of them.

FEMINISMS

By Annette Bradshaw

NOW MORE OF A MATCH FOR ONE THAN EVER BEFORE.

LOLA.—Every word I'm telling you is true, Margaret. The secret of style is to have something different but not obtrusive. It took thought and time to match my gloves and stockings in these two-tone effects and with just the same clocks, too; but the result was worth the effort. I matched mine myself, but now I hear you can buy matched sets in the stores.

WINIFRED BLACK TALKS ABOUT Little Girls and Dolls

Copyright, 1924, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

"PEOPLE pay more money to have old dolls repaired than it would cost to buy a new one"—that's what the doll doctor says—and the doll doctor really ought to know. Hurrah for him and the good news.

What in the world would we do without the children to keep us believing in everything that's best in human nature?

What kind of doll did you love best when you were little and believed everything everybody told you and thought that the fairies danced every night under the old oak tree and knew just exactly what you were going to ask the fairy godmother when she whisked down the chimney and stood in the room, red cloak, peaked cap, and all?

Let's see—there was Araminta—she was blonde and had real curls and a blue satin dress and a little blue silk fan with silver spangles on it.

Pretty thing, Araminta—but somehow I never cared very much for her really.

I liked Rose Margaret very much better.

What a Joy She Was!

Rose Margaret was wax, too, and she wore her hair in a braid and her frock was blue and white gingham trimmed with something we used to call ratchet.

Winifred Black

You could take off the gingham frock and wash it in your new little wash tub and hang it on a little line and pin it with your new little clothes pins, you could iron it on your tiny ironing board and take Rose Margaret out of her crib and dress her all spick and span and fresh as a pink and there she was all ready to be hugged and loved and stood in the corner and punished and sent to school with her school books tied to her arm—oh, yes, Rose Margaret was very satisfactory as a child.

But better than Rose Margaret I liked Ellen. She was made of china and she had short black china hair curled in lovely china waves and a rosy china face and big blue eyes. She was chubby and surprised looking and you could wash her face and hands a dozen times a day and she would have just the same complexion as she had had when you began—only cleaner.

A Multiplicity of Roles

And nothing was ever the matter with Ellen, not even if she fell out of the apple tree when you forgot and left her there with the red fairy book and the wind came up in the night.

But best of all, I loved—my darling wooden doll.

For years she was my constant companion. Some days she was a new born baby, very troublesome and of a most delicate constitution. The medicine I brewed for that doll out of currants and raspberries—and the wet bandages I put around her head—she certainly was hard to rear. Some days she was a little girl about five down with the measles and whooping cough and scarlet fever, all at once—dear me, how dramatic it was—and then again she was a beautiful girl graduate, all dressed in white muslin and bouffant and wearing a wreath of real roses. And all the time what do you think she was—just a plain stick of wood from the kitchen woodbox?

That's why I liked her. The other dolls were always the same but Woodbine could be changed from one thing to another just by a twist of the mind.

Yes, I loved Woodbine best of all and nobody could ever understand it—Woodbine went with me on all my journeys—she passed a winter in Washington and spent a lovely summer at the Atlantic seaboard.

She went up to Wisconsin to the lakes to get a change of climate and on cold winter mornings I tucked her snugly in bed when I went to school. But the other dolls, all in their gorgeous array with their set painted faces—I left them wherever they happened to be and never gave them another thought.

For Woodbine was really mine—I knew exactly how she looked and what she felt, and nobody else could ever know a thing about it. Sometimes when I see a man married to rather a stupid little woman and very much in love with her when he could have married somebody rather pretty and more than rather intelligent, I think of Woodbine—and partially understand.

The most human thing about dolls, after all, is the people who own them.

HOME-MAKING HELPS

"Everything About the House Helps to Make the Home"

By WANDA BARTON

How to Make Your Environment Satisfy Your Needs.

LIVING conditions have changed those made of heavy Russian fillet in recent years. Room in small houses and apartments is at a premium, and furniture and fittings must be kept in strict accordance with needs. We must rid ourselves of useless things, furnish our homes in harmony with our environment and cease to accumulate things for which we have no immediate use. The big round or oblong dining tables with their extra leaves have had to give way to refectory tables which take up less room, even though they may limit our hospitality or to tables with drop leaves of the gate-leg variety. The drop ing table-cloth has also been laid aside for the more convenient dolly sets which are effective and save heavy laundry work. Among the newest table sets are those made of heavy Russian fillet. This lace may be gotten by the yard as well as already made up in runners or squares. Many women are making the sets, themselves, and finishing the edges with lace that comes by the yard to match the all-over material, or by crocheting silk fringe in and knotting it heavily. Sometimes a table-cloth is used which exactly fits the top of the table. This type of cloth is usually embroidered natural linen. In the use of shorter tables, extension ends that pull out when more space is needed, these table-cloths are not practical and only the sets are used. Rectangular place doilies are used on these tables in preference to round doilies, as they hold the entire service for one place as well as the service plate. Using silver vegetable dishes and serving-platters, the china may be changed for each course if desired, for it consists only of plates, butter-platters, cups and saucers. The latter do not appear until the coffee is served. This is the day of variety in china, and with the short sets needed, one may indulge in variety without being accused of undue extravagance. Table benches that match the tables are growing in popularity, for they do away with formal chairs except at the table ends, and they also well-underneath the table at either side when not in use. This makes them decidedly room-savers. A fruit or flower bowl with a candlestick at either side to match is all these tables need in decoration. The wide, upholstered couch with a deep drawer underneath, or with a top that lifts up, makes an excellent extra bed and storage place, which justifies the space it occupies.

YOUR HEALTH

You Will Never Get Thin Unless Willing to Work

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.,
United States Senator from New York,
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City

I READ the indignant denial by a director of physical education of the charge that college women are increasing in bulk and weight. "This Venus de Milo stuff is being awfully overdone," she says. "The girl of to-day has more endurance and strength and is healthier than the one of a generation ago, because of the way she dresses, her physical activities and her outdoor life."

Miss Margaret M. Andrews, the instructor I have quoted, laughs at the idea that the waistline of the modern girl may reach dangerous proportions. She exclaims, "What difference does it make if she dares to wear comfortable shoes and exhibit a natural waistline?"

Miss Andrews' belief apparently is that the young women have not changed. Instead of confining the same amount of bulk within stiff corsets or pinching her feet by wearing tiny shoes, the modern girl prefers to be comfortable even if her methods shock the conventions. She is not really bigger, but merely looks bigger.

I agree with Miss Andrews so far as her views relate to the athletic woman. It is true, however, of the average American woman that she is no bulkier or heavier than she used to be. I fear not.

We help ourselves too little these days. The women are not the only offenders—the men are just as bad. A friend of mine telephones for a taxi cab to take him six blocks to a gymnasium where he goes to exercise.

We have forgotten what great value attaches to walking and swimming, simple ways of making the muscles work. We ride when we should walk. We loiter on the cushioned seats of luxurious limousines, even the modest five-dollar cabs, and from muscular effort. We sit down on easy chairs and forget we have feet and what they are intended to do for us.

My mail is filled with letters asking about my photographic reducing records and my advice on overweight. Diet lists and exercise are recommended. Are they followed? I fear not. If crooking the little finger twice a day would take off a pound a day, these would be no fat people.

But you cannot get thin or keep thin unless you are willing to work, to get hot, to sweat. You cannot get thin or keep thin unless you have character enough to reduce your intake of fat-producing foods.

One-third of what you eat goes to make you live. The other two-thirds go to make the doctor live. You eat too much. I eat too much. Everybody eats too much.

When I ask you to eat less you need not go hungry. The right selection of foods will satisfy your appetite and keep you moderately happy even if your palate yearns for sweets and other superfluous things.

The athletic young woman and other athletic persons are solid in their muscles. Even though they make them look big it is a good kind of bigness. But fat is bad for you because it isn't confined to the outside of your body. It replaces the muscle of your heart and burdens other vital organs.

"A lean horse for a long race" gives a suggestion to wise human beings.

Answers to Health Questions

T. T. Q.—Please tell me why some persons have so much trouble in pronouncing the letter "R."

A.—This condition may simply be due to poor pronunciation when young or to some speech defect, as a slight "tongue-tie."

A.—No, gall-stones are not hereditary.

MRS. L. K. Q.—I have taken four bottles of mineral oil, but still have to take Selsitt's powders three or four times a week to keep my bowels open. Is there anything else you would suggest that I do?

A.—Add more stewed fruits and bran to your diet, and take the oil both morning and night.

J. V. Q.—I am a girl fifteen years old and would like to ride a bicycle, but was told that it is unhealthy for a girl to ride one. Is this true?

A.—Bicycle riding, if care is taken not to ride too much, is a very healthy exercise for any one.

HEROINES OF HISTORY

Significant Incidents in the Lives of Famous Women

By MARK STUYVESANT

A Mother Who Typified the Heroic Women of Her Day.

IN Dedham, Mass., there to-day stands a house in which a real heroine of the Revolution lived. She did not load and fire a cannon. She did not give her life for her country. But she served it with a loving sacrifice and homely assistance which helped gain for her land its independence.

For Mrs. Mary Draper, who lived on a prosperous farm with her husband and children, when she first heard the call to arms not only urged her husband to respond at once, but with her own hands strapped the knapsack on her six-year-old son and bade him depart to join the colors.

Her daughter was distracted to think of her young brother going to war, but to her remonstrances her mother quietly answered, "He is wanted and must go. You and I, Kate, have also service to do. Food must be prepared for the hungry. For before to-morrow night hundreds, I hope thousands, will be on their way to join the Continental forces. Some who have traveled far will need refreshment; and you and I with Molly, must feed as many as we can."

Immediately this splendid woman started her work. There was much grain in the barn and their dairy was one of the best in the colony. So all night Mrs. Draper, her daughter and servant worked baking great quantities of bread. In the morning, on the roadside, Mrs.

Draper arranged shelves where her big loaves of bread and cheese were placed. Cider in bucketfuls was placed there.

Soon the weary troops, after the night's march, began to file by the farm. Their fatigue and hunger were relieved by the food which Mrs. Draper had prepared for them. All day she was replenishing the supply, and many a young man and boy blessed the woman who had so bravely met the need so generously.

Soon came the news, after the Battle of Bunker Hill, that there was a scarcity of ammunition. Although Mrs. Draper loved every bit of the beautiful pewterware which was the pride of her home, she immediately melted it and made bullets with her own hands, in the bullet-mould which her husband had fashioned before leaving.

Not only did she do this, but she and her daughter made uniforms out of every inch of woolen material on which they could lay their hands. The store of sheets was torn and cut into shirts for the patriots who were fighting for independence. Even her own flannel garments were ripped apart and made into garments for the soldiers.

Before long her home was stripped of nearly every comfort—if not necessity. Mrs. Draper gave all—not only her household goods and clothes but her energy and strength, and even her husband and son to the cause which she believed just.

Although Mary Draper was not even heard of beyond the vicinity in which she lived, she is typical of many women who, by their devotion, courage and unselfish sacrifice, helped to win for the Colonies the right to stand in the world as a free and independent nation.

She Fed the Weary Soldiers.

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE: I am a girl in my teens and am in love with a young man three years my senior. I have a girl chum who also loves this man. She tells me to go ahead and go with him, but I know she cares. I do not want to lose the friendship of my girl friend, so please give me your advice whether to drop this young man or drop my chum. VICTOR FLAPPER.

VICTOR FLAPPER: There is no reason why you shouldn't keep both for friends, my dear.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE: I am engaged to a girl five years my senior. I just graduated from college and am out of a job. She wants to get married right away, but I don't want to get married for a year or so, until I get a position. I have some money saved up, but am afraid I have not enough to get married on. Please advise me what to do. VICTOR FLAPPER.

WORRIED: Do not marry until you are financially able to do so. Your fiancée should be willing to wait.

Diary of a Fashion Model

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

She Describes a Gown Admired on the Stage.

OCCASIONALLY Madame gives theater tickets to two of us so we can go to the theater together. To-day she called Haidee and me into her private office.

"I'm always frightened when Madame sends for me," Haidee confessed as we went in.

"Nonsense," I answered. "You know how kind Madame is. I choose to think she has a nice surprise for us."

And sure enough I was right. "Girls, there are three first-nights in town," she began. "I couldn't possibly go to all of them, and I want you to take these two tickets." The leading lady is wearing frocks from the shop," she said, mentioning the actress's name.

"The models I remodelled," Haidee exclaimed.

"Yes, she is exactly your size," Madame said.

"I wish I looked like her," Haidee said, as she launched into a vivid description of the actress's appearance.

"You forget I've seen her a thousand times," I reminded her gently. "All her clothes come from here."

We were impatient all the afternoon for a first night is no small event.

Evening found us gowned in the proper way, and planning to treat ourselves to a taxi to the theater.

We were soon seated in breathless expectancy.

The interesting first-nighters came strolling in, and there were many beautiful gowns in the audience.

"I see just loads of Madame's things," Haidee whispered. "There's 'Chinatown' just across the aisle."

This was one of Madame's most popular models.

Just then the curtain gave signs of rising, and we settled ourselves for an enjoyable evening.

"The jade green gown worn by the leading lady was really lovely," we heard someone say behind us, after the first act was over.

"And I had such a start when she first came on," another voice answered. "It seemed to have nothing to hold it up over the shoulders."

"The flesh colored tulle was at most invisible, it was so nearly the color of her skin," the first voice answered.

Haidee and I exchanged amused glances.

The frock was jade tulle, yards and yards of it in the skirt, posed over jade taffeta.

Tomorrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6.
According to the planetary configurations, this day should be noted for the removal of some long-standing obstacle or the breaking up of crystallized conditions, making way for a steady and substantial growth in business and gain in possessions, owing to personal application and industry. It may be necessary to move carefully and with sagacity to get rid of this obstacle. At letters, papers and contracts should be signed with precaution. Those whose birthday it is may look for a year in which there will be relief from old obstacles and congestions. They should make steady progress if they handle affairs cautiously, especially in the matter of signing all writings. A child born on this day will be steady, industrious and persistent, making a success of its undertakings through these qualities.

AMUSEMENTS

What the Press Agents Say

One of the contributory forces to the great success of D. W. Griffith's screen classic, "The Birth of a Nation" which is underlined for two days at the Princess theater starting Wednesday is the great cast which American's foremost screen producer gathered for that spectacle. Gauged by their present earning capacities the price of assembling such a cast would be positively prohibitive.

While there are thousands of others in "The Birth of a Nation," the leading roles were created by Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Aitken, Ralph Lewis, Joseph Henabery, Raoul Walsh, Donald Crisp, Howard Gaye, George Siegman, Walter Long and Elmer Clifton.

After a lapse of a few years during which time it has been held as the comparative model for every big picture which has followed it, "The Birth of a Nation" stands out foremost among the greatest screen achievement of the American picture world.

Its recent revival at the Capitol theater where it broke all records, again demonstrated its powerful appeal to the public.

It will be presented here exactly as given recently on Broadway and is still under the personal direction of the great Griffith whose other works have attracted a deal of his time but which have never diminished his interest in this first venture that so thoroughly established his fame.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATED.

Louis George Hoff celebrated his seventh birthday anniversary on Saturday and a most delightful party was given on that afternoon in his honor by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Hoff.

The thirty five little guests met at his home on Jackson street and marched to the old Hoff home on Sherman street and there they enjoyed outdoor games on the spacious lawn under the supervision of Miss Stella Orr. Probably the most enjoyable of these was the rabbit hunt in which Early Phinizy, Jr., was the winning hunter, while the outstanding outdoor game played later pinning the heart on the center of a large white sheet and Walter Marvin Penney was lucky at this, receiving the prize. All fished in a miniature pond, containing paper hats and favors for each girl and boy.

Two large rooms on the lower floor of the home were decorated with hearts and valentines and the dining table, around which the children gathered for the ices, cake, candies and nuts, was lighted with red candles at each corner and covered with heart valentines. Robbins at each place when pulled revealed a slice of the birthday cake at the other end and Lucille Chenault received in hers a thimble, Betty Baird in hers the button and Alice Hoff, Jr., pulled the one containing the dime.

The following is a list of the youngsters, who late in the afternoon repaired to their homes happy and full wishing that Louis George would have a birthday every month; Betty Baird, Francis Malsby, Frank Ragin King, Dorothy Buttrey, Mary Jones, Sarah Bloodworth, Gus Hildreth, Frances Ann Green, Katherine Chum, Walter Marvin Penney, Katherine Mundy, Early Phinizy, Jr., Charles Eyster, Jr., Mary Preult, Marjory Phinizy, Preult, Cartwright, Jr., Earle Calvin, Jr., Frank Chenault, Julia Wert Hildreth, Sarah Perkins James Duncan Hunter, Carl Nell Patterson, Thomas Bailey, Eva Love Wyatt, Mary Kate Troop, Sara Sue Hughes, Clifford Smith, A. NEW JAPANESE CABINET IN BITTER FIGHT

This is the first photograph to reach America of the new Japanese Cabinet, which began its official life by dissolving the Diet amid a riot, during which Premier Viscount Keigo Kiyomura beat and killed Minister of Railways Kenjiro Komatsu, while the other Cabinet members fled in fear of their lives. In the front row are Dr. Rentaro Miyakawa, Minister of Home Affairs, and Premier, the Viscount Keigo Kiyomura, Minister of Marine; Mr. Senji Egi, Minister of Education; Viscount Toshiaki Suzuki, Minister of Justice. In the back row are Mr. Kenjiro Kori, Minister of Railways; Mr. Kobayashi, Chief Secretary of the Cabinet; Mr. Fujimura, Minister of Communications; Mr. Katsuo Shoda, Minister of Finance; and Baron Matsui, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

DEVOTED AMERICAN LABORS TO SUBDUING MEXICAN DESERT

ENSENADA—Faith in the ultimate agricultural development of the desert regions of Mexico has impelled David Smith, called "the Burbank of Mexico" to put in 35 years experimenting with the soil in a five acre world of his own two miles from here.

Thorny cactus and sagebrush once were all that grew on his little farm, but now it is filled with flourishing fruit trees and vines. It is an oasis in a stretch of desert.

Among the 28 varieties of fruits that Smith is producing in the desert are thornless blackberries, spineless cactus, persimmons, mulberries, pears, apples, walnuts, chestnuts, milk-white quinces, white sapotes, avocados, grapes, guavas and a delicious result of the grafting of apricot and peach.

Smith is an American. He came from the middle west. He lives by himself but not for himself. He is something more than 50 years of age, tall and sturdy, a man, delighting in the open air.

UNDERWOOD WILL ATTEND FUNERAL

(Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5—Because of the death of Woodrow Wilson, Senator Underwood, Alabama, candidate for the Democratic nomination for President, will be unable to address a joint session of the Senate and House of Mississippi Thursday as he had planned. In a telegram to the House and Senate of that state he said:

"A great leader of democracy is dead. As I will attend the funeral I must ask that my engagement to address the Mississippi legislature at this time be postponed to another date."

"The intellectual and moral attainments of former President Wilson have endeared him to the whole American people and our deep respect for his memory makes it impossible for me to turn our thoughts in other directions at this time."

"His place is fixed with the great figures of history as the one man of modern times who has advanced the cause of international peace and lies a martyr to that cause."

WHEN KING RICHARD II DINED

Spoons and Fingers Were Good Manners and Carving Was New Fangled.

English in the Canterbury days ate much in the French style. Spoons and fingers were good manners and carving was new fangled, if it was in fact practiced to any extent at all.

Richard II and the duke of Lancaster once dined in London with the Bishop of Durham. The king, the duke and the bishop and their retinues and guests called for 120 sheep, 14 salted oxen and 2 fresh ones, 1,240 pigs, 12 boars, 210 geese, 720 hens, 50 capons "of the grease" and 8 dozen other capons, 50 swans and 100 dozen pigeons, rabbits and curlews by the score, 11,000 eggs, 12 gallons of cream and 120 gallons of milk.

Such was a royal feast, and every day, whether fast day or eating day, had four meals. Breakfast at seven, dinner at ten in the morning, supper at four and livery at eight at night. The hour of dinner is said to show the development of cooking in any given country. But there were Chaucerian refinements, nevertheless, aside from dishes of flowers; permissible foods imitating the form of meats on fast days, even eggs being counterfeited, and other things such as making two capons out of one by skinning it and stuffing the skin. There were, besides, the points of etiquette: A pig for a lord could be endured, his cabbage thickened with egg, not crumbed; a pike served whole to a lord, but cut for the commonalty. And mint sauce has a pedigree reaching to Edward I—Kansas City Star.

ANESTHETIC USED IN 220 A. D.

Chinese Remedy Known as Ma Yao Was Extracted From India Hemp Centuries Ago.

An anesthetic the effects of which were like those of ether or chloroform, was used in China in 220 A. D., by the surgeon Hua-mo-tou. This is established beyond doubt by the text of Kuo lin yi tong, which was brought to the attention of the Academy of Sciences in 1829 by Stanislaus Julien. The Chinese anesthetic, known as ma yao—that is to say, "the remedy which takes away feeling"—was extracted from Indian hemp, which also yields hashish.

The old Chinese text tells us: "Hua-mo-tou gave a dose of his ma yao to the patient, who a few minutes later became unconscious—that is, as though he were deprived of life. As the case demanded, Hua-mo-tou would operate upon the person or amputate and remove the cause of sickness. Then he would draw the tissues together at the point of incision and apply ligatures."

"After a few days the sick man was on his feet again without having felt the least pain during the operation."—North China Herald.

Poles, Wire and Apparatus Added by the Carload

MORE than 5,200 poles—88 carloads—were added to the Bell Telephone System in Alabama during 1923. Other items of material which were also added during the past year were 7 carloads of cable and five carloads of copper wire.

To complete the extensions and meet the growth which demanded such large quantities of poles, wire and cable, the telephone workers broke all previous construction and installation records last year.

This material, equipment and work represented an additional investment of more than $894,000. Most of it was new money, secured from investors who have faith in the future of the telephone industry in this state.

During the next five years more than $9,366,000 must be invested in the Bell Telephone System in Alabama to provide adequate and efficient telephone service when and where it is needed throughout this growing state.

The success of this big undertaking depends largely upon your continued friendly interest and encouragement.

Let the Kiddies Romp Outdoors In All Weathers

There is Nothing Like Fresh Air Play to Build Sturdy Bodies. If Colds Come Treat Externally.

Children should play outdoors daily in winter as well as in summer. To keep them indoors so much is a mistake. For healthy growth they need and must have lots of outdoor exercise.

Of course, some colds will come as a result of exposure. But constant internal dosing must not be thought of.

Vicks answers the need. It is externally applied and can be used frequently without upsetting the digestion.

When rubbed on over throat and chest Vicks acts externally like a liniment of plaster. At the same time the ingredients, vaporized by the body heat, are inhaled directly into the affected parts.

Vicks is the ideal treatment for children's cold troubles.

YOUTH OF AMERICA APPEAR INTERESTED IN FOREIGN TRADE

NEW YORK—A rapidly increasing numbers of young Americans is becoming interested in foreign trade as a career, according to the Educational committee of the national foreign trade council. In order to encourage young men in this direction, and to prevent foreign trade being an adventure of ignorance on the part of employers, the committee is arranging a special educational session in connection with the annual convention of the council at Boston next June.

The committee has circularized colleges and universities in the United States which have foreign trade and business courses, inviting them to send teacher and student delegates to the convention. Also it is taking steps to call the attention of exporters and importers, manufacturers and others engaged in foreign trade, to the need of encouraging, by way of employment American youth who show interest in foreign trade as a career.

An official compilation, not long ago, showed collegiate courses in foreign service training in 52 colleges and universities with a total number of student enrollments in all subjects relating to this type of training at 12,202, with 4,973 students carrying foreign work as a major branch. A more recent investigation showed 63 institutions with a total number of 16,746 students in commerce and finance and allied subjects, and 3,787 students carrying foreign work as a major branch.

A closer analysis of these figures tends to reduce the number of students actually engaged in training themselves for foreign business service, for the above figures include men who intend to enter the consular or other foreign service work of the United States Government.

The council says its investigations show that the foreign departments of American banks have been increased nearly eight-fold since 1914.

E. H. Huxley, chairman of the educational committee, said recently: "We have built up a vast and complicated technique for our domestic trade; we must now do the same for our foreign trade. For haphazard methods we must substitute scientific training. Foreign trade is a profession; it can be learned only by study and experience."

SEVEN WONDERS OF AMERICA CREDITED TO NATURE AND RUM

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—In the second century B. C., Antipater of Sidon said there were seven wonders of the world: the Hanging Gardens of Babylon; Phidias's Statue of Zeus at Olympia; the Colossus of Rhodes; the Pyramids of Egypt; the mausoleum at Halicarnassus; the Temple of Artemis at Ephesus, and the Pharos of Alexandria.

Now comes a New York newspaper employing the questionnaire in seeking the consensus of public opinion as to the seven wonders of the United States. "All countries" have not been heard from, but Robert Sterling Yard of the U. S. Bureau of National Parks, and a large following picked them as follows:

1. Glacier National Park, because of its remarkable geologic history, unique mountain forms, exquisite coloring and extraordinary quality of beauty.
2. The Grand Canyon.
3. Rainbow Bridge, because of its vast size and exquisite proportions, it is one of the world's most imposing spectacles.
4. Yosemite Valley, because of its extraordinary geologic history and unequalled beauty.
5. Yellowstone geysers, tiers of buried forests and native wild animals.
6. Grant Sequoia trees thousands of years old in Sequoia, General Grant and Yosemite National Parks.
7. The Eighteenth Amendment.

Good Night Stories

DOTTY MEETS MRS. VIOLET-TIP BUTTERFLY AND HER OLDEST CHILD.

"Oh!" Dotty exclaimed as she saw a beautiful silver and gold spotted caterpillar hanging head-down from a leaf on the hop vine in her grandma's yard. "How in the world did you ever get tangled up that way, head down? Oh, dear, I wish Squeedee—"

"Presto!" laughed a merry voice and the little elfin, himself, hopped down beside Dotty. "I was just passing when I heard you call my name. What's wrong this time?"

"Oh, Squeedee!" cried Dotty, shaking the wee elfin's hand. "I'm so glad you've come. Do you see that poor little caterpillar struggling in the" hop vine? His feet are all-tangled up in that spider's web, and he's hanging head down. I'm not very fond of caterpillars, but I don't like to leave a life to a poor, only spider. He's such a beautiful silver and gold caterpillar."

Squeedee laughed merrily and Mr. Caterpillar laughed with him. Dotty didn't know whether to laugh or cry. She didn't see anything funny about standing on one's head.

"Oh, dear me!" said Mr. Caterpillar and he tightened his hind legs in the webby silk. "Don't worry about my standing on my head. All we violet-tip butterflies start like that way on our heads. I guess that's one reason why we live all Winter—"

"It might be," and you're tangled up that way because you wish to be?" Dotty asked in a surprised tone. "It's not a spider's web?"

"I'll say it isn't," laughed Mr. Caterpillar. "If you don't believe I made that web, ask my mother. Here she comes!"

Dotty turned around just as a great beautiful butterfly settled down beside the caterpillar. She was nearly two and a half inches from the tip of one wing to the tip of the other. The upper sides of her wings were dark brown and orange, but when she closed them, they looked just like the bark on the trees. On each of her hind wings, in the very center of the under-surface, was a beautiful silver semicolon.

"This is my oldest," laughed Mrs. Violet-tip Butterfly. "and he is spinning that web for his cradle. In about two weeks, he'll turn into a lovely butterfly like me."

"But it's a shame to see him hanging head down. I hate to think he must hang there so long. And he is so handsome with his gold and silver spots."

"Don't you worry," laughed Mrs. Violet-tip Butterfly. "There's one thing you can be sure of. The more brilliant those silver and gold spots of his are, the better luck your grandfather will have with his crops this year. They say brilliant spots on a violet-tipped butterfly caterpillar are a sure sign of fine crops."

Just then Dotty's grandfather came up to her side. Mrs. Violet-tip Butterfly sailed away and Squeedee hid behind the bush. When Dotty showed Granddad the gold and silver spotted caterpillar, he laughed.

"Sure enough," Granddad said. "He is a prophet—and I hope his prophecy comes true. And he and Dotty went back to the house for lunch."
